Skate park should be built somewhere ugly

The ideal place for a skate park would be in Bondi Junction. Even with the attendant graffiti, noise and undesirable older people hovering, it couldn't make the Junction uglier. Perhaps it should be in the forecourt of the latest glass and steel tower approved.

And it should be named personally after the developers and the planners that approved this new monster, which will shadow the surrounds, especially the park.

Send skateboarders to Centennial Park

The problem of the choice of site for a skateboarding facility is the real problem that certain Woollahra residents tend to overlook.

Woollahra Council has a number of underused parks that could easily fit a new skateboard park.

The rambling Cooper Park has a number of underused spaces that could easily accommodate a skateboard facility without forcing the children using it to travel almost into the City of Sydney Council area.

Centennial Park could easily fit one and has parking — which is sorely lacking in Rushcutters Bay.
